It was stated that in 1917 the company was able to save for net income 33.69 cents out of each dollar of sales, and that in 1919 the net income was 37.80 cents out of each dollar of sales. These figures were erroneous, the Evening World's informant having based his calculation on gross carnings instead of gross sales. The corrected figures for 1919 show that the company in that year saved a net income of only 8.58 cents out of each dollar of sales. The gross sarnings for 1919 were $7,-422,414.47, as published, while the gross sales for the same year were in excess of $32,000,000.
